

Rollin' & Dustin':

Pathways to Urban Life Styles

The Institute for Community Research (ICR) was founded in 1987 based on critical social science and education principles, and methods of participatory and partnership action research.

Our mission is to conduct research in collaboration with community partners to promote justice and equity in a diverse, multiethnic world.

Rollin' and Dustin' reflects the stories and data that young people in Hartford have shared from 1997 to 2005 about their challenges, their achievements, and the role of new drugs in their communities and their lives.

The project is the result of a collaborative partnership between ICR and the Hartford Animation Institute and youth in the city.
